Description

A small 18th-century oil on copper depicting a sailing ship off a fortified coastline. In the foreground, two figures bring the shore to life, while a port city takes shape in the distance in bluish tones. The finely rendered rigging, the highlights on the hull, and the flags lend a sense of movement to this peaceful scene. The browns of the shore contrast with the soft hues of the sky and sea, adding depth to this small-format composition. The painting is set in a period frame made of molded wood, with a varnished reddish-brown glaze and gilded highlights, whose warm tones complement those of the landscape. Period: 18th century. Technique: oil on copper. Notes: A small chip in the paint layer at the bottom right, revealing the copper. See detailed photograph.
