Description

Small coffee table or side table made of mahogany and flamed mahogany veneer, dating from the first third of the 19th century, Empire-Restoration period. The upper section features a rectangular, bowl-shaped top, bordered by a solid, slightly flared rail. The base opens to reveal a large, lockable drawer, the interior of which retains several small side compartments for storage. The piece rests on two straight legs of rectangular cross-section, adorned at their base and top with bronze rings, joined by a substantial crossbar that forms the base. The quality of the veneer is particularly evident on the drawer front and the top's rim, featuring mahogany with a beautiful grain and sheen. The base rests on small casters, making it easy to move the piece--a characteristic feature of decorative furniture from
