Description

Folding stool, known as "Ployant," in brushed steel and leather, designed by Amaury Watine. Its X-shaped base and original saddle-stitched leather seat. This model was indeed designed by product and spatial designer Amaury Watine--a high-end creation from his contemporary furniture collections. It's quite possible this model is a unique piece! A graduate of ISD (Institut Supérieur de Design), the designer notably gained recognition by co-founding the global design studio Ultraconfidentiel in New Delhi, which focuses on projects that blend interior architecture, spatial design, and bespoke furniture. His furniture lines are frequently characterized by a return to strong geometric structures and the use of noble, raw materials such as brushed metal, marble, solid wood, and thick leather. French designer Amaury Watine is primarily known in the furniture world for his brand By Ultra (notably his famous high tables and geometric consoles) as well as for his work as creative director at Tétris. To acquire seating, major pieces, or commission bespoke furniture (tables, exceptional counters) by Amaury Watine, there are no mass-market distribution channels or traditional furniture stores in Europe. His approach, akin to collector's design and high-quality, exclusive craftsmanship, results in pieces produced in very limited series or developed to order through the official professional channels of his studio.
