Description

Roman balsam bottle in iridescent green glass - 1st-2nd century A.D. archaeology, glassware
An elegant Roman balsam bottle made of pale green blown glass, featuring a beautiful iridescent surface with pearlescent and silvery hues, evidence of its long time buried in the ground. With its slender shape, it is characteristic of the small perfume or ointment bottles used during the Roman era. Its simple and refined silhouette is particularly highlighted by the iridescent hues that cover much of the surface. Height: 9.4 cm
Condition: chips on the rim, visible in the photographs. Beautiful antique iridescence and surface patina. A fine example of ancient Roman glassware, whose delicate iridescence lends the piece a particularly decorative character. Price does not include
