Description

Oil on canvas by Jean Levasseur (1935-2024) depicting a seascape with a pink parasol. Work signed in the lower right corner. 24 x 33 cm Jean Levasseur attended the École des Beaux-Arts in Le Havre and held his first solo exhibition in 1964. Starting in 1965, he painted daily and became a member of the Artistes Français in 1970. In 1977, he decided to devote his life to painting, gave up his other activities, and built a studio in his home in Saint-Aubin-de-Crétot. A founding member of the AYAC (Association yvetotaise des artistes cachois) in 1978, he participated in numerous exhibitions. His works attracted the attention of galleries, and he was notably featured in 1991 at Dugast in Paris. Awards, medals, and honorary diplomas began to pile up. His paintings captivated buyers both in France and abroad. "Jean Levasseur shares with the Normandy region an authenticity that he brings to life through a style as rich as it is subtle," says journalist Thierry Snyderka. His colleague from Le Havre, Daniel Fleury, writes: "He roams the Pays de Caux and draws inspiration from everything that makes our region so rich: the beauty of this chalk plateau, the lush grass, and the overwhelming power of the sea as it crashes against the high walls of our fields." The artist Michel Ciry, for his part, notes that he is "one of the few painters whose spontaneity (he) envies."
