an allegorical image of "Charity," depicted through the maternal figure who bestows her love not only upon her own Son but also upon other children in need. The theme is depicted here in a particularly refined manner, with a very balanced, perfectly symmetrical composition, in which the main figures completely fill the canvas, illuminated from the front and standing out clearly against the dark background. The work conveys positive feelings, and the Christian message is evident. The solemn stillness--a far cry from exuberant Baroque depictions--and the joyful atmosphere, in contrast to the severity of Northern European artists, belong to the canons of 16th-century Italian painting, with particular reference to the pictorial and chromatic characteristics of the 16th-century Romagna school. The scene, in addition to being particularly pleasing, is joyful and full of positive symbols, clearly suited for domestic devotion and was undoubtedly commissioned for this purpose. It is a work of great charm and looks excellent on the wall.
