Description

Quality Pair of Late 19th-Century Brown Leather Chesterfield Wing Armchairs A fine-quality pair of late 19th-century Victorian brown leather Chesterfield library wing armchairs, retaining their original hand-dyed leather hides and displaying a superb, gently worn patina. The leather has been carefully cleaned and polished, giving it a wonderfully soft, supple feel while preserving its rich color and character. Traditionally filled with horsehair, featuring classic deep-buttoned back upholstery and loose feather-filled seat cushions, these chairs offer exceptionally comfortable seating. Generously proportioned, each armchair features a fully buttoned scroll back and arms, with beautifully curved silhouettes and a strong, timeless Chesterfield profile. The chair boasts scrolling arms, a sprung seat, and close-nailed brass stud detailing. They stand on square, tapering legs with H-frame stretchers and remain in excellent original condition, reflecting both their quality and durability. Upholstered in high-quality hide and hand-dyed to an elegant beige/tan tone, the leather displays a rich, even finish with a striking patina that speaks to age and fine craftsmanship. Heavy and solid, these armchairs are built to last and make a bold statement in any setting.

Combining comfort, style, and period charm, this handsome pair would fit perfectly in a library, drawing room, study, or contemporary interior seeking a touch of vintage luxury. Seat height is 44 cm.
