Exceptional Louis XIV-era ceremonial armchair in walnut...Remarkable silk upholstery with a floral design, accented with fringe. It has not undergone any restoration and is in impeccable condition. In the 17th century, a ceremonial armchair served primarily to symbolize the social status and power of the person seated in it. At that time, where one sat held real social significance; certain seats were reserved for people of very high rank. A ceremonial armchair was therefore not merely intended for comfort but also served as a symbol of authority, wealth, and status. 17th century (circa 1680-1700)
