Description

Victorian carriage clock from the late 1800s. The case features a distinctive domed and cylindrical shape, with architectural decorations on the sides consisting of columns and vertical fluting, while the top is surmounted by a sturdy arched handle, a characteristic feature of travel clocks designed for transport. The front features two dials: the main dial, light in color, with Roman numerals and black hands, displays the time; below it is a small secondary dial, likely linked to the alarm function, a common feature in travel clocks. Origin: England Period: late 1800s Style: Victorian Dimensions: 10x7x12h cm
