Description

This little First Communion doll is wearing an authentic outfit for the ceremony: a long white dress, a tulle veil edged with lace, and an ornate alms bag with ribbon and lace; in her hand she holds a candle. What makes this doll unique is the torso, which is made of polychrome bisque; the face has a childlike expression, her blond hair is adorned with a wreath of white roses, and she holds a small missal in her hand--proof that she is indeed depicted as a First Communion girl. This piece dates from the early 20th century; it is quite unusual, and the display under a glass dome gives it a distinctive presence, reminiscent of older fashion models. Protected by the dome, the figure is in perfect condition; only the lace at the bottom of the dress is slightly dusty.
