Description

Large Japanese planter made of patinated bronze, which can also be used as planters or a hibachi, dating from the Meiji period, late 19th century. A beautiful, large-scale piece, richly decorated with two cranes in high relief, depicted moving around the body of the planter within a naturalistic setting. The bronze work is particularly detailed, featuring a beautiful antique patina and decorative elements in relief. The piece bears a Japanese stamp identified as ????? - murakami hiko seizo, indicating it was produced by Murakami Hiko, a bronze artist associated with Kyoto during the Meiji era. This mark, along with the quality of the decoration and the piece's dimensions, make it a particularly interesting item for collectors of Japanese bronzes from the Meiji era. Japan, Kyoto - Meiji era, late 19th
