Description

A beautifully crafted Louis XIII walnut stool, exemplifying the robust elegance and refined craftsmanship of seventeenth-century French furniture. Executed in richly patinated walnut, the stool rests on finely turned legs connected by an intricate network of turned and carved stretchers, showcasing the distinctive decorative vocabulary of the Louis XIII period. The stretcher framework is enriched with carved rosette motifs and spiral-turned elements, creating a lively interplay of sculptural forms while providing structural strength. The warm walnut tones contrast beautifully with the later orange upholstered seat, which has been professionally reupholstered, offering both comfort and a fresh visual presence while respecting the stool's historic character. With its compact proportions and architectural silhouette, this stool can serve as additional seating, a decorative accent, or an elegant footstool in both period and contemporary interiors. Good antique condition with age-appropriate wear, patina, and minor marks consistent with centuries of use. The seat has been professionally reupholstered in an orange fabric. Structurally sound and ready for use.
