Description

An elegant pendant light composed of several dozen hand-blown glass drops with organic shapes, assembled into a generous cluster and suspended from a metal frame. Crafted in the tradition of Venetian Murano glassmaking, this light fixture stands out for its abundance of clear glass elements, whose rounded, layered shapes evoke a cluster of grapes or a crystalline bloom. Light passes through the multiple layers of glass, creating subtle plays of transparency and reflections. Dating from the 1970s, this chandelier illustrates the period's taste for sculptural light fixtures, in which glass becomes both a functional material and a decorative element in its own right.
