Description

A pair of winged griffins in bronze with a dark brown patina. Each figure is depicted with its mouth open, standing upright on long legs ending in talons, with its wings spread. A spiral scroll decorates the shoulder of each creature. The griffins are hollow on the back, with a mounting plate featuring two screw holes on the back. The open mouths have a circular opening. They likely served as supports, furniture elements, or ornaments to be mounted (to be confirmed). The modeling is meticulous: the plumage on the wings is finely chiseled, the musculature of the legs is well-defined, and the details of the claws are precise. They form a genuine pair, with slight variations inherent to the casting process. 19th century
