Description

Oil-on-canvas painting signed "Lieven" (1854-1941)--the second pseudonym of the painter Galien Laloue--a 19th-century work dating from around 1890, depicting a sunlit village street, likely in Provence, with very strong light on the white facades, small silhouettes in the background, light impasto, post-Impressionist brushwork, and a very luminous sky. Galien-Laloue is known for his scenes of Parisian streets in the snow or rain, but his depictions of southern village streets under the pseudonym Lievin are highly sought after. The carved, gold-leaf frame is original, dating from the late 19th century. The French painter was very popular during the Belle Époque.
