Description

An elegant six-light chandelier dating from the late 19th century, featuring a gilded metal frame entirely adorned with a dense pattern of small crystal elements and beads. The structure, which is particularly intricate and striking, features numerous arms and sinuous volutes, embellished with crystal pendants of various shapes and sizes. In the central section, the composition extends vertically through a succession of decorative elements, culminating at the top in a crown also adorned with crystals. The six light-bearing arms are topped with worked-glass bobeches. The richness of the decoration and the lightness of the structure give the chandelier a particularly luminous and elegant appearance. The electrical system has been rewired with new wiring and is in working order. Period: late 19th century
