Description

Mixed media (ink and pencil) on paper. Signed in the center left. The title of the panel, "The little fish said to Manu: Save me, and I will save you," is written in pencil. and the panel number (No. 30) This is an original illustration created by the great comic artist and illustrator Sergio Toppi, likely for a comic book story, as indicated by the panel number. Sergio Toppi is one of the great masters of comics, regarded by critics as an absolute master and a pioneer of the global comic art scene, recognized worldwide for his unmistakable style, which is also evident in this panel. His unique style first and foremost broke free from the rules of the classic comic panel layout to make way for a contemplative visual flow, which makes the storytelling more fluid and allows him to construct worlds suspended between historical realism and the magical realm. Another distinctive feature is his frequent use of the black-and-white contrast as a key expressive tool, although Toppi also skillfully employs color. It has been said that "every panel by Toppi is a comic within a comic; every page of his work is a work within a work, capable of achieving unique emotional power and communicative value."
