Description

An elegant pair of oval-shaped oil-on-canvas paintings, mounted on panel, depicting lavish bouquets of flowers arranged in Medici-style vases. These decorative compositions follow the tradition of 17th-century Flemish and Dutch-inspired still lifes: an abundance of flowers, a warm and contrasting color palette, and a composition set on an entablature against a landscape background. The painterly style and treatment of light date the work to the late 19th century, reflecting a historicist taste that was highly sought after at the time. These are likely decorative elements (wood paneling, lintels, or wall panels) that were reused and later presented as oval-shaped paintings. The gilded wooden frames are modern. A decorative pair with a striking presence, ideal for symmetrical hanging
