Description

A charming 19th-century French School floral still life depicting a bouquet of brightly colored flowers arranged in an elegant black vase. The composition is distinguished by a free and expressive painterly style. The flowers, in a rich palette of reds, pinks, oranges, and whites, stand out against a luminous ochre background. The contrast between the dark vase and the bouquet's vibrant colors lends the piece a beautiful harmony and a particularly striking decorative presence. The painting is executed in oil on panel and bears the monogram "SCA" in the upper right corner. With its intimate format, it evokes a small cabinet painting intended to be appreciated up close. The work is preserved in its remarkable original early 19th-century frame, made of wood and gilded stucco. This richly decorated period

The painting has a well-preserved surface and fresh colors. The frame shows some old restorations but retains beautiful gilding and its original decoration. The photographs are an integral part of the description.A lovely antique French painting in an intimate format, particularly decorative, which would be equally at home in a collection of French paintings and floral still lifes as in a classic interior, a country house, or an arrangement of small paintings.
