Description

An 18th-century oil on canvas depicting an alchemist in his workshop, in the style of Teniers. In the foreground, a man with a long gray beard, wearing a blue coat with a fur collar and a matching cap, is absorbed in his work. A second figure stands behind him, near the hearth. The interior is depicted with particular care: vessels, vials, hanging utensils, and well-stocked shelves create an evocative setting. The large, dark hooded stove frames the scene, while the glowing embers and the blue hues of the costume enliven a palette dominated by browns and ochres. A cabinet painting full of character, whose intimate atmosphere and numerous details invite close observation. The painting is presented in a period frame.
