After a childhood in the Périgord region about which very little is known, the young artist arrived in Paris and enrolled at the École des Beaux-Arts, from which he graduated with honors a few years later. He returned to his native region in 1879 to take over as director of the Municipal School of Drawing in Périgueux, and also became an art teacher at the teacher-training colleges for boys and girls.A student of Gustave Boulanger, Jules Lefèvre, and Jean-Joseph Benjamin-Constant, the painter set up his easel on the banks of the Dordogne or the Isle to "recount a few memories" through realistic landscapes filled with gentleness. Through his style, the painter conveyed a profound sense of his homeland and his roots to his compatriots. His works, stripped of artifice, depict local residents working their fields or simply strolling along country paths. These paintings and drawings by Pasquet depict life in the Périgord at the dawn of and throughout the 20th century, always set in specific locations. He is one of the artists of the Périgieux School. This school, somewhat overlooked in art history, highlights the heritage and identity of the Périgord region. Among its representatives are Jean-Louis Daniel, André Saigne, Georges Darnet, René Laforest, Roger Favard, and André Prugent. This movement shares a common theme that stands apart from the artistic norms of the time: landscape. "It is a school without a leader or a dominant style, but one that worked with extraordinary enthusiasm. They loved to tackle fragments of nature that we call 'picadis' here." Jean-Michel Linfort

The artist painted the Dordogne, but not exclusively; he also traveled to the Creuse and, very regularly, to Saint-Georges-de-Didonne. There he paints rivers, the sea, harbors, bridges, dunes, and forests. He skillfully captures these subjects and brings them to life through vivid colors and the movement of his brushstrokes, lending depth to the landscapes. The outskirts of Périgueux are a common theme in the painter's work. From Chancelade to Trélissac, he traverses the banks of the Isle River to capture contrasting images, often enlivened by a few figures going about their business. Here, the painting was created a short distance from the ferry crossing on the Isle River in Campniac. This spot, known as "Trou de Landrive," is located between the ferry and the Maladrerie.
