Delauziers 1941 André Delauzières, whose real name was André Balande, was a French painter born in Paris in 1904. He was the son of the famous painter Gaston Balande, with whom he shared a love of painting and landscapes from an early age. To sign his works, André chose the name Delauzières, in reference to Lauzières, a town near Nieul-sur-Mer where his father had set up his studio. He mainly painted landscapes, harbors, streets, and scenes from the La Rochelle region, with a very personal sensitivity. Unfortunately, his life was cut short. After being wounded during the war, he fell ill and died on August 23, 1941, at the age of only 37. His story is all the more moving because he is often presented today as the son of Gaston Balande, even though André Delauzières had developed his own artistic world. Behind this artist's name lies a brief but interesting family and artistic history, spanning Paris, La Rochelle, and Charente-Maritime.
