Description

A significant chandelier from around 1760 with 12 light arms arranged in two rows. Structure and shaft: Bronze frame partially gilded with mercury. The central shaft consists of a series of cut-glass baluster elements, interspersed with bronze components. The piece is topped at the base by a large solid-glass finial (from a later period). Lighting arrangement: Chandelier featuring two rows of dynamically curved gilded bronze arms fanning out like a corolla around the central shaft. Trim and crystals: Rich decoration consisting of pendants, scalloped plates, and drops in cut crystal, as well as rock crystal cabochons. The attachment points are concealed by sculpted rosettes and fleurons. Spikes: Large baluster-shaped spikes made of cut crystal are arranged on the lower row, alternating with the
