Description

This piece depicts a fô dog or guardian lion (Shishi). A traditional Chinese or Japanese protective sculpture, cast in bronze using the lost-wax method (with a hollow on the reverse side, visible on the base). A roaring fô dog, depicted in a seated position with its mouth open, a stylized tail curled upward, and a coat chiseled in relief. Cast bronze with a golden patina and dark shades in the recesses. Asian Art style, 20th century. Good overall condition; original patina preserved.
