Description

A pair of large decorative panels made of painted wood, likely from an Alsatian workshop or, more broadly, from the Rhine region, dating from the 19th century. Each panel features a polychrome design combining birds, fountains, and plant motifs in a highly decorative and symmetrical composition. The design is enhanced by gilded highlights. The painting is executed on softwood panels, surrounded by a blackened wooden frame. Through their iconography, color palette, and decorative character, these panels are part of the tradition of 19th-century Alsatian and Rhenish folk art. They may have come from a set of wood paneling or painted furniture. Period: mid-19th century. Condition: generally good condition, preserved in the state in which they were discovered. Slight wear, scuffing, and minor
