Description

Stone carvings in bas-relief depicting a heroic warrior or a deity (probably Mars or Heracles) in the pure tradition of ancient heroic nudity; he wears a crested helmet and holds his shield and a trophy of arms (tropaion) consisting of a breastplate surmounted by a helmet. The scene blends harmoniously into an architectural setting framed by columns. This composition reflects a fascination with Ancient Rome, which can also be seen in the Campana plaques, for example. Dated to the first half of the 19th century; it may be older but is difficult to date. Beautiful patina of age, some wear, chips, and missing pieces.
