Description

A delicate miniature hardstone sculpture depicting a rhinoceros, crafted in the spirit of Fabergé from natural nephrite in the 20th century. The sculpture shows the animal in an alert pose, standing on its widely spread legs, as if it had paused to listen to the sounds of the savanna. Its slightly raised tail adds a touch of liveliness and a subtle note of irony to the composition. The understated yet expressive form accurately captures the rhino's power, mass, and character. The nephrite, carefully selected for its natural hues, realistically reproduces the texture of the animal's skin. The finely polished surface reveals the stone's full chromatic depth and intrinsic beauty. The horn is carved from bone, offering an elegant contrast to the deep green of the nephrite. This work is rooted in the tradition of
