Description

A very simple iron tsuba in the round "Maru-Gata" style, featuring openwork (sukashi) with five-petaled Sakura cherry blossom motifs on either side of the nakago-ana, the central perforation. Positioned between the blade and the hilt, the tsuba not only protects the wearer's hand from blows by an enemy's weapon but also serves as a counterweight for the sword's overall balance. Over time, tsubas have become true works of art highly sought after by collectors. Signs of wear and patina from age 19th century.
