Description

An elegant and authentic mid-century dressing table (or powder table) from the Louis XV period, crafted from solid walnut. It features a magnificent original patina in a honey color, which is particularly warm and luminous. This exquisitely refined piece of bedroom or living room furniture opens at the top via a triple-flap mechanism. In the center: A lift-up flap with its interior walnut frame (mirror is missing, offering the option to replace it with a mercury mirror or to leave it as is) revealing a storage compartment. On the sides: Two hinged flaps that open outward to expand the space and reveal two deep side compartments for bottles. Their hinges were replaced at a later date. On the front, the dressing table features its very complete original layout: A central sliding writing shelf, covered in its original green morocco leather, surmounting a large central drawer with a bronze keyhole. A functional drawer on the right fully compartmentalized (period compartments for cosmetics, powders, and toiletry bottles). A trompe-l'oeil false drawer on the left that balances the perfect symmetry of the ornate waistband. The piece rests on an elegant, curved base with sinuous and light lines, typical of the high 18th century. Since the piece is perfectly finished on all sides, it can be placed freely in the center of a room. Original period locks on the piece (sold without a key). The piece is sound, stable, and of fine craftsmanship. Technical specifications:
