Description

A very elegant Regency-Louis XV style coffee table made of solid oak with a waxed patina. Our table rests on four legs, each featuring a graceful curve known as a "goat's foot" and edged along its entire length with delicate molding that ends in a carved foot. The upper portion of each leg is adorned with a carved drop motif. The apron is decorated on all four sides; in the center of each side is a beautiful rocaille design and elegant acanthus scrolls framed by cartouches featuring a latticework and four-leaf motif, motifs typical of the first half of the 18th century and very common in the Paris region. The piece is topped by a tabletop adorned with molding around its entire perimeter; this tabletop was likely made in the 19th century to replace a marble top. A few small reinforcements were added beneath this top
