Description

Kilim. Usak, Western Anatolia. Circa 1980. 195 × 120 cm A craft that lives on... This kilim bears witness to a tradition that, in certain regions of Turkey, has stood the test of time. Handwoven around 1980, it serves as a reminder that the weavers' craftsmanship did not fade away with earlier productions: it has continued to thrive, sometimes with remarkable precision and mastery. The qualities of an antique piece The fineness of the weave, its regularity, and the balance of the composition evoke the qualities sought in the finest antique kilims. For a relatively recent piece, this level of craftsmanship is rare. It demonstrates that a piece woven in the 1980s can still achieve a level of quality worthy of the finest antique examples. midnight blue background unfolds a constellation of geometric motifs. The stars, arranged with precision, give the field a beautiful depth and a rhythm that captures the eye. Some shapes evoke the yin and yang symbol, like two complementary forces united in the design. Magnificent borders frame this composition and echo it with a vocabulary of powerful forms: stylized wolf's mouths and eagle's wings. These motifs bring movement to the whole and seem to convey a sense of protection and freedom. A contrasting, deep, and luminous color palette. Midnight blue structures the composition and highlights the rich reds, ivory, soft greens, and touches of pale yellow. Plant-based dyes lend this palette a nuanced depth, while their contrast highlights the precision of the design.
