Description

- Oil on canvas. Original canvas. Hand-signed "Turrión, 1999" in the lower right corner.- Far from being reduced to a mere expression of desire or an erotic fixation, the presence of the rope against bare skin in this composition functions as a rigorous ontological meditation on the limits of human freedom. In the gesture that binds the arms and wraps the face in a dense fabric, bondage transcends its profane immediacy to become a ritual of existential suspension: the voluntary renunciation of movement and sight is not here an empty submission, but a paradoxical path of withdrawal toward the inner absolute. By depriving the subject of their ability to act upon the world--to touch, to see, to flee-- the painting evokes the Hegelian dialectical tension between master and slave, suggesting that true sovereignty
