Description

Striking in its form and resolutely modern aesthetic, this silver-plated pitcher stands out for its asymmetrical silhouette and fluid lines, which give it an almost organic look. Its curved body extends into a long, tapered spout, balanced by a black Bakelite handle whose curve is arched like a ponytail. The lid, elegantly integrated into the piece's overall design, is topped by a small black spherical knob that echoes the handle and reinforces the unity of its design. Created between 1985 and 1990 for the Italian house Pomellato in Milan, based on a design attributed to designer Handler, this pitcher exemplifies the creative spirit of Italian design in the late 20th century. Far from traditional models with classic shapes, it boasts a bold, almost futuristic aesthetic, transforming this utility object into a decorative
