Description

A spectacular Chinese carved wooden stool, likely made in the late 19th or early 20th century. It features a remarkable cylindrical backrest entirely carved in high relief and openwork, displaying a profusion of dragons winding their way through stylized clouds and plant motifs. The carving, particularly dense and deep, unfolds across several decorative registers separated by geometric friezes and beaded moldings. The upper section, richly adorned with architectural motifs and openwork carvings, supports a molded square top. The entire piece rests on three carved legs decorated with fantastical creatures, which enhance the theatrical character of this piece. The dark patina highlights the reliefs and accentuates the depth of the carving. This stool is a true curiosity, as
