(Grenoble, Paris, Lyon, Bagnols-sur-Cèze, Saint-Claude) as well as in Chicago, Osaka, Tokyo, Hong Kong, Essen, Geneva, and Lausanne. The Drouet Gallery in Paris exhibited his work continuously between 1959 and 1979. His painting was initially influenced by Gromaire's work, specifically through a muted, earthy palette of shades mixed with gray or brown, and the geometric lines defining his landscapes and figures. Later, he developed greater spontaneity and freshness, creating brighter, more vibrant interpretations of subjects drawn from nature.
