Description

A beautiful decorative piece carved from wood and gilded, depicting an angel with outstretched wings, holding an imposing heraldic shield in her hands. A charming sculpture, notable for the gentleness of its youthful face, its slightly raised gaze, and the delicacy of its hands. The finely crafted wings and the soft folds of the garment attest to the artist's skillful carving. Probably originating from an old architectural decoration or a set of wood paneling, this angel retains a superb patina with golden and brown hues, giving it all the depth of an antique object. Estimated period: 18th-19th century, to be confirmed. In good overall condition despite signs of age: wear on the gilding, old cracks, small chips, and traces of wood-boring insects, particularly on the wings. A unique decorative piece, imbued with
