Description

Mid-20th-century circular coffee table, designed by the renowned American designer Paul McCobb (1917-1969) for the prestigious furniture company Directional, circa 1954-1955. This iconic model, from the "Planar" series, perfectly embodies the refinement and minimalism of the American Mid-Century Modern movement. The circular Carrara marble top, white with intense gray veining, rests on an elegant geometric brass frame. The crossed "X"-shaped base--a major aesthetic signature of the designer--gives the piece great visual lightness and remarkable structural purity. A timeless collector's piece, ideal for a contemporary or high-end vintage interior. Condition: Good overall condition. The Carrara marble top is particularly well-preserved: it has a beautiful polish, with no cracks, chips, or restoration. The original brass base is in perfect condition, complete, and structurally very stable (no play in the structure). Note: The brass shows signs of wear and natural oxidation over time. It is being offered "as-is" and will need to be cleaned/restored using a suitable product to restore its original luster (a simple and superficial restoration).
