Description

Japanese bronze planters with naturalistic relief decoration, Meiji period, late 19th century Elegant Japanese planters in patinated bronze, likely dating from the late 19th century, during the Meiji period. This beautiful piece stands out for its generous, rounded shape, accentuated by rich relief decoration. The body is enlivened by a delicately chiseled botanical design, combining sinuous branches, foliage, and stylized flowers in a composition full of movement and refinement. The flowing lines of the decoration contrast harmoniously with the geometric frieze featuring a Greek key pattern that frames the neck. The deep, warm brown patina features subtle golden highlights that catch the light and reveal the bronze's relief details. The piece rests on three sculpted feet, giving it an original base and a particularly balanced silhouette. This decorative piece reflects the Meiji-period Japanese taste for richly ornamented bronzes, a time when Japanese artisans developed remarkable expertise in metalwork and the creation of decorative objects intended for both the domestic market and Western collectors of Japanese art. With its abundant decoration, the quality of its relief, and its antique patina, this piece possesses a remarkable decorative presence. It will naturally find its place in a classic or contemporary interior, either on its own or as part of a collection of Far Eastern art objects. Period: late 19th century, Meiji period; stylistic attribution to be confirmed. Origin: Japan. Material: bronze with a brown patina. Decoration: plant motifs in relief, geometric frieze, and carved feet.
