Description

This contemporary bracelet in 750/°° rose gold (18 KT, eagle-head hallmark) captivates with the purity of its lines and the balance of its design, combining the preciousness of gold and diamonds with the understated elegance of a black fabric cord. Its central motif, consisting of an elongated oval with gently rounded ends, features a particularly refined silhouette. The softness of its curves subtly contrasts with the geometric precision of the square-section gold wire from which it is crafted, giving the piece an aesthetic that is both graphic and delicate. This unique construction lends the motif an architectural dimension, while its various polished facets play with the light and highlight the delicacy of its design. A brilliant-cut diamond, discreetly set within the gold, accentuates one of the motif's lines. Its sparkle adds a touch of luxury to this deliberately minimalist composition without disrupting its harmony. It is not the focal point of the piece, but subtly accentuates the design, reflecting a jewelry-making approach that prioritizes the purity of lines and the precision of proportions over ornamentation. The bracelet's construction is an integral part of its aesthetic. The central motif, largely openwork, forms an oblong loop whose design finds a natural extension in the loops of the black cord, which intertwine with it on either side when worn loose. The succession of these three oblong shapes creates a remarkable graphic continuity: the gold motif does not simply appear to hang from the cord, but is integrated into a composition in which each element contributes to the harmony of the whole. This alternation of supple lines and open shapes gives the bracelet a particularly airy structure, while the contrast between the warmth of rose gold and the depth of black highlights the delicacy and luminosity of the central motif. The black cord, with its slightly satiny sheen, features sliding knots that allow the bracelet to be easily adjusted to fit the wrist. Its suppleness and lightness ensure comfortable everyday wear. Both understated and bold, this piece embodies a resolutely contemporary approach to jewelry design, where the apparent simplicity of the forms reveals a genuine aesthetic vision. The balance of its proportions, the interplay of materials, and the continuity of its design lend it a timeless elegance that is as refined as it is modern. Estimated diamond weight: 0.01 carat Condition: very good condition, imperceptible micro-scratches, natural inclusions in the diamond not visible to the naked eye.
