Description

Large, flat provincial writing desk in the Louis XV style, dating from the mid-19th century, the Louis-Philippe era / Second Empire. Beautifully proportioned, this solid wood desk--likely made of cherry wood--rests on four curved legs joined by scalloped crossbars. The rectangular top, nearly two meters long, is constructed from several solid wood planks joined within a wide mitered frame. The desk features two distinct sides: one has two large side drawers flanking a central open section, while the other is adorned with three trompe-l'oeil drawer fronts, fitted with drop-down brass handles. This allowed the desk to be placed in the center of a room. The two functional drawers, which are particularly deep, feature traditional construction with dovetail joints and solid wood bottoms. The piece has retained a
