Description

The "à la financière" candlestick is a traditional model of a torch or stylized candlestick made of bronze, brass, or silver. It is a popular tableware and decorative item from the 17th to the 19th centuries. This candlestick design is very distinctive: the body (shank) of the candlestick is often square, fluted, or beveled in cross-section, with a solid, stocky structure. The base is wide and square or octagonal, ensuring good stability on a table. It generally features rich, chiseled ornamentation: cherubs' heads, fleurs-de-lis, crowned dolphins, interlaced patterns, or foliage. Most often made of bronze, like this pair, they are also found in brass or solid silver. This model was commonly used in the studies, counters, and salons of the wealthy of that era. Its low profile and heavy base prevented it from tipping over and
