Description

Large rectangular serving tray made of wood, pyrographed and painted to depict a Breton scene from the Art Deco period. The piece depicts a Breton couple in traditional costume seated in front of a bay window overlooking a bell tower. Best known for his ceramics, Paul Fouillen (1899-1958) also created a few pyrographed and painted wooden objects. This tray with handles is a fine example of his cabinetmaking and decorative painting from the 1930s. It is in very good condition, with only a few minimal signs of age--virtually none--signed in the lower left corner and bearing the studio stamp on the back. Length: 45.5 cm. Width: 34.4 cm. Height (including handles): 8.5 cm. Shipped with an invoice--quick, careful, and very secure. Shop with confidence: find our customer reviews by
