Description

Bronze sculpture with a beautiful patina; a medallion depicting a young woman leaning against a column and holding a tambourine in one hand and other a shawl draped along her body. Very beautiful and delicate engraving. Signed "Dubois" on the base. Paul Dubois was born in Nogent-sur-Seine in 1827 and died in Paris in 1905. The son of a notary, he first studied law but, drawn to sculpture, enrolled at the École des Beaux-Arts in 1858, where he remained for a year before spending four years in Italy--notably in Florence--and discovering Florentine Renaissance sculpture, which would leave an indelible mark on his art. He became curator of the Louvre Museum in 1873, a member of the Institut de France in 1876, and director of the École des Beaux-Arts in 1878.
