Description

Adams Ceramics. A collector's item for connoisseurs and enthusiasts of fine English ceramics. A superb and authentic sugar shaker (muffineer) crafted from fine stoneware in the Jasperware style in deep cobalt blue, manufactured by the prestigious firm William Adams & Sons in Tunstall (Staffordshire, England). This piece is strictly period (late Victorian/Edwardian period, circa 1896-1910), as evidenced by the complete official markings stamped in relief beneath the base: "ADAMS ESTBD 1657," "TUNSTALL ENGLAND" in their original rectangular cartouches, as well as the initials of the modeler, "J.C.," and the workshop mark "W." Details and Craftsmanship: The matte stoneware body features a magnificent and rare continuous circular frieze executed with remarkable finesse (using the sprigging technique). It vividly depicts a scene from a traditional English hunt: riders setting off, finely detailed saddle horses at the edge of a wood, and a pack of hounds with their noses to the ground following a trail. The upper mount and its richly openwork domed lid are original, crafted from beautifully finished silver-plated metal. Condition: Ideal for a cabinet of curiosities or a discerning collection. The blue has retained all its original intensity without any fading. The white stoneware reliefs are intact.
