Description

A significant, large 18th-century bookcase, characterized by refined lacquered and faux-marble-painted woodwork. The structure features a distinct architectural design, marked by columns with carved capitals and a prominent molded upper cornice. The upper section is organized into spacious open compartments with shelves, ideal for displaying books, art objects, and collections, while the lower section consists of numerous paneled doors that provide ample storage capacity. Of particular note is the painted decoration imitating marble, executed in warm tones with contrasting veining, which lends the piece great elegance and a striking visual presence. A piece of furniture with great decorative impact, suitable for libraries, studies, reception rooms, historic residences, or
