Description

An antique, large polychrome terracotta sculpture depicting a smiling young boy wearing a cap, a jacket, a striped shirt, a scarf tied around his neck, and shorts. Standing barefoot, with his left hand in his pocket, he looks amusedly at a pipe held in his right hand. The bowl of the pipe, sculpted in the shape of a young boy's head, bears a resemblance to the figure himself, adding a touch of humor. The sculpture stands out for its facial expressions, the detail of the clothing, and its polychromatic finish. The figure rests on a rocky ground and a tree trunk. Work from around 1900 in the style of Goldscheider's pieces. Height: 67 cm. In good overall condition, with some damage to the pipe.
