Description

A striking designer ring by Piaget, crafted in 18-karat yellow gold (750 fineness) and set with brilliant-cut diamonds. Its wide band features an architectural silhouette inspired by the shape of a hexagonal nut, giving the piece a sculptural presence characteristic of late 20th-century European jewelry design. The central section is defined by a double decorative band integrated into the ring's structure. One of these bands is set with a row of brilliant-cut diamonds. The contrast between the polished surfaces of the yellow gold and the sparkle of the diamonds highlights the model's precise geometry and creates a subtle play of light. The design is entirely fixed, with no moving parts. Its substantial weight, the precision of its facets, and the remarkable quality of its finish exemplify Piaget's craftsmanship,
