Description

Rare solid silver protractor, dating from the early 19th century, during the Empire period or the early Restoration. Precision instrument signed "Meurand à Paris," featuring fine engraved graduations. It bears the Paris small hallmark featuring a lictor's fasces with an axe in the center, used between 1809 and 1819, as well as a silversmith's mark that has yet to be identified. Particularly interesting due to its construction in solid silver, a material much less common than the brass typically used for this type of scientific instrument. A beautiful collector's item, representative of early 19th-century measuring and precision instruments. Period: 1809-1819, Empire or early Restoration. Material: Solid silver. Width: 10.6 cm.
