Description

Large bronze animal sculpture by Thomas Cartier (1879-1943) depicting a sheepdog, standing with its ears pricked and its mouth slightly open. A French animal sculptor, Thomas Cartier studied under Georges Gardet, one of the leading figures in animal sculpture of the late 19th century. He exhibited at the Salon des Artistes Français beginning in 1904 and specialized in depictions of dogs, big cats, and wild animals. His work is characterized by a careful observation of animal anatomy, highly expressive poses, and vigorous modeling, which is particularly evident in his rendering of the fur. This large bronze features a nuanced green patina, highlighting the surface work and the details of the modeling. It rests on a natural stone pedestal. (mounting to be reviewed) signed on the stone base Artist: Thomas
