Description

In late 19th-century Budapest, jewelry making was not only a craft but also a form of artistic expression and aesthetic refinement. Among the leading figures of that era was Károly Bachruch, who expanded the family business and became a renowned representative of Hungarian goldsmithing. The creations from his workshop combined precise craftsmanship, rich ornamentation, and a deep respect for historical traditions.Bachruch's work was distinguished by the care taken in working with precious materials, the use of enameling techniques, and the harmonious arrangement of pearls and gemstones. His workshop produced not only exceptional jewelry but also silver goldsmith pieces designed for special occasions. His creations embodied the artistic spirit of the turn of the century, which enriched traditional goldsmithing techniques with new forms and refined details.In the art of jewelry making during Károly Bachruch's era, ornate design and artisanal craftsmanship were closely intertwined. The gemstone-set jewelry attributed to him and documented in records also attests to the prominent role his workshop played in the world of fine jewelry of his time. The shape of the brooch shown in the photograph offers an interesting parallel to the aesthetics of that era.Material: Combination of 14-karat gold and silverStone: Dutch rose-cut diamonds, approx. 3.0 ctPeriod, style: Art Nouveau, 1900sDimensions: 9 × 3.5 cmWeight: 15.0 gAll of our jewelry is offered for sale after having been carefully inspected, professionally cleaned, and prepared for sale.In accordance with current regulations, our products bear an official Hungarian hallmark--either historical or contemporary--in compliance with applicable European conventions.
